From: WJ Cornelieus
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 12/4/01 11:45am

Subject: More anti-competitive, pro-Microsoft propaganda from Intuit.

Hello DOJ.

The snip below is from this web page which appeared 12/4/01:

http://www.macintouch.com

Intuit is the maker of Quickbooks and Quicken financial management software. See what Intuit supervisors are telling the employees about a Microsoft competitor.

-----

MacInTouch reader Paul Taylor wrote about a recent experience with Intuit sales:

"I just received an unsolicited phone call from Intuit to sell me TurboTax. The agent [...] finished her sales pitch, and I agreed to purchase TurboTax. I have used MacInTax (now known as TurboTax for Macintosh) for many years now and believe it to be a good product.

"When I informed [her] that I used a Macintosh, not a Windows machine, she informed me that the price would be $10 more that she had been quoting. She had said the Windows version was $39.95, and the Mac version would be $49.95. When I asked why the Mac version was $10 more, she said she had been told by her supervisors that the "Macintosh was an outdated computer," and that "it ???????

was more expensive to produce [TurboTax] for [the Mac]. There are more Windows computers."

_____

Thank you for listening.

M. Clark